Virtual Programs:

Flower Walk: 6

Book challenge: 6

Sourdough class:

I've had some challenges with Zoom not allowing me to open meetings, Julie Rember stepped up and saved our book discussion meeting by scheduling and opening a new meeting.

All of the hand sanitizer stations are here. Enright will mount and fill the outdoor stations.

Limited opening is stressful. Locking the door and changing the sign has helped. People are not great with the masks we provide, leaving them open at the bottom, etc. I'm the old battle-axe though, and make sure they are on properly. I have an elderly couple that just cannot keep their face coverings on while they are in here. It's frustrating to be sure. Luckily, not many people are entering the building. The locals browsing time is appreciated.

I'm trying to figure out how we can count our wireless users, but it's not an easy thing. I've talked with John Neely and the broadband consultant from the Idaho Commission for Libraries. Neely will be here Thursday or Friday to put the filter on our wireless router and do any updates.

The summer reading challenge went out on June 30. I had two responses by 5:00 that evening! I'm getting super photos from the kids. Still have not purchased prizes. The stores have been so busy I don't like to go in.

If anyone has ideas for more virtual programs, please let me know.
